Importance of Working With Partners in Capacity Building What Does the Term Capacity Building Mean to the Peace Corps and Its Partners The Peace Corps works within a human capacity-building framework where the focus of work is on the development of people, not things - assisting people to develop the capacity to improve their own lives according to their own decisions. This capacity building needs to happen at a number of different levels. Counterparts and Supervisors are instrumental in helping to ensure that sustainable development is happening at all levels of the capacity-building framework. The Four Levels of Capacity Building Individual members of the community, project participants They could be the students in a classroom, farmers in a cooperative, or clients served by an NGO. Building capacities at this level is usually a major focus of the Volunteer. Much of the work Volunteers...
