Not illustrated. 1903 Excerpt: . grown more complex; as fiduciary institutions have multiplied; as business enterprises are more and more carried on by means of corporations where the resources are furnished by many, but where the management is conducted by a few; the need of governmental inspection and examination in the interest of the individual has become imperative. Even in cases where annual statements are published, they are often too complex for the laymen to understand. The innocent investors, depositors or other creditors must, therefore, look to the State for assurance that certain financial institutions are conducted upon sound business principles. Publicity enforced by the State is becoming more and more essential to secure honest management and safety of investments and to protect the general public. Now, the ordinary police officers and magistrates are not competent to execute such laws as may be enacted for this purpose. Recourse must be had to those who have technical knowledge and expert skill, and who are removed from the influence of local prejudices and favoritism. Prior to 1852 few official reports were required from financial, insurance or other credit companies. As the State owned one-half the stock of the State Bank of Indiana, it was necessary in self-protection to insist upon full and regular statements from that institution. The savings institutions incorporated after 1835 were usually required to report annually to the General Assembly.¹ No examination was 1 Special Laws, 1835-6, pp. 146, 164, 177, 183, 205, 232, 225, 240, 279, 280,...
