A September 1989 amendment to the wheat program for the 1990 crop year allows producers to plant in excess of their crop acreage base in exchange for a reduction in the number of acres covered by deficiency payments. nonrecourse loan benefits. Continuing to plant the program crop on the flexible acres is therefore somewhat more attractive than if these benefits were to be restricted in the same way as deficiency payments. Estimates of net returns per acre for major crops by region of the country were examined to determine possible shifts in plantings resulting from the triple base option. Table 2 shows the estimated net changes in plantings of major crops stemming from the triple base option under the...
