The demand for this work is growing stronger and stronger all the time, and wherever the subject of agriculture has been taught in the public schools the results have been highly satisfactory. President Roosevelt, through the National Commission on Country Life, aroused a great deal of interest in country life and country social conditions which is finding expression in many ways. Our whole nation is beginning to realize the need of better rural schools and more practical instruction. The Committee on Industrial Education for the Country Communities appointed by the National Educational Association in 1905 struck the keynote when it said: The country schools, which train nearly one half of...
