Not illustrated. 1854 Excerpt: .comparison with the pictures of English artists: here we have no rival, and are not likely to have any while the stately woods, the ancient castles, the clear flowing rivers, and the broad verdant meadows of Old England remain to attract the lovers of picturesque scenery in its living beauty, or on canvas. PEACE. AD Landseer never painted any other picture than this, it would undoubtedly entitle him to the very highest rank that an artist in his especial department might assume; while they, if there be any such, who are accustomed to regard him as a mere painter of animals, however original in his conceptions and treatment, must, on a close analysis of this composition, entertain a contrary opinion, if they have eyes to see and minds to comprehend. The casual observer will discern little else than a group of sheep and goats quietly reposing, and children engaged in some half-idle occupation, but the work suggests a far wider range of ideas, and is of more extensive application than an ordinary picture of animals: it is a poem of the pencil. We may fairly presume that its title was not an afterthought; the artist desired to give his definition of Peace, and composed his subject with this express intent; just as a poet would arrange the time and circumstances of an epic. And first, there is the place--the cliffs overlooking the harbour of Dover, the nearest port to our ancient enemy, but now, happily, our...
