It was then recalled that the elastin used had been prepared some years before, and had been preserved with a solution of thymol in alcohol. That the blue color was due to thymol was confirmed by mixing some thymol with ten percent, ammonium hydroxide solution and obtaining the color on standing. Alcohol appeared to accelerate the transformation. By evaporating the ether extract (which was red), a purplish red oily product, soluble in ether, toluene, and alcohol, was obtained. On another occasion the oily product became crystalline. One of the most interesting observations was that the red alcoholic solution was turned deeply bluish by a drop of N/10 sodium hydroxide solution, the red being restored by a drop of N/10 hydrochloric acid solution. This color reaction would clearly indicate its use as an indicator. These observations naturally suggested further inquiry. What was the nature of the blue pigment obtained by the action of ammonia upon thymol? How would it behave when substituted for thymol in the important uses to which the latter is put? How would other phenols behave when treated with ammonia,...
